Scotland’s draft interim constitution: clear-sighted and sensible, or an SNP power-play?

The Scottish Government recently published The Scottish Independence Bill: A Consultation on an Interim Constitution for Scotland, the document which would form the basis of the constitutional arrangements for Scotland in the event of a 'Yes' vote in the forthcoming independence referendum. Democratic Audit asked expert constitutional thinkers to give their views on whether the document is fit for purpose.

The Scottish Parliament (Credit: Wojtek Gurak, CC BY NC 2.0)

Professor Stephen Tierney, Director, Edinburgh Centre for Constitutional Law

The interim constitution is short and clear. It also sets out a positive vision for Scotland. So I shouldn’t be churlish. But it contains a number of policy issues which, rather than being locked away in a constitution, should be left to the competence of an independent Scottish Parliament. And if we start with this as a template, the permanent constitution is likely to be even more detailed and policy-laden.

If Scots do take the momentous step of voting Yes in the referendum why not let the parliament of a new state find its own feet? Scottish nationalists dislike Westminster’s authority over Scotland, but let’s not blame parliamentary democracy for this. Parliament’s supremacy has been a flexible and democratic model. A danger is that this will be swapped for a constitution drafted by the most vocal vested interests and that judges will become the most important politicians in an independent Scotland.

If the people do vote Yes in September why not leave political power in their hands, to be exercised by their parliament and, for big decisions, by the people themselves through future referendums?
Professor Iain McLean, Nuffield College, University of Oxford

Whereas Scotland’s Future was long and evasive, the Scottish Independence Bill and accompanying notes are short and to the point. This is the best document on independence yet released by the Scottish Government.

The Bill opens ‘In Scotland, the people are sovereign’. It thus junks parliamentary sovereignty. Though it makes obeisance to the Declaration of Arbroath (1320), this is really the work of the late Lord President Cooper (MacCormick v. Lord Advocate 1953 SC 396 at 411), and the late Neil MacCormick, son of the 1953 petitioner. Lord Cooper destroyed the intellectual coherence of parliamentary sovereignty. Sir Neil drew the attention of his SNP colleagues (and everybody else) to the importance of that.

But popular sovereignty need not be unlimited. It is not in the USA because of the Bill of rights and other constitutional provisions. Nor would it be in an independent Scotland, because this Bill constitutionalises the Human Rights Act 1998. Scots Law may therefore not be inconsistent with sovereignty.Unionists as well as nationalists should welcome such a clear-headed document as this.

Norman Bonney, emeritus professor at Edinburgh Napier University

The policy of the Scottish Government, outlined most coherently in Scotland’s Future, is not just to secure an independent Scotland, but also to secure one in which the Scottish National Party continues to control the Parliament and Government. Its ambitious, many would say, unrealistic, policies which are part of its independence plan, are the basis of the programme that it would put, in the event of a ‘yes’ vote to the Scottish people in the Scottish Parliamentary elections in 2016 thus hoping to extend its current place in power from 2007 at least until 2021.

In that interim period Scotland would be governed by a single chamber Parliament, possibly with an SNP majority government elected just prior to independence, with no counter-availing constitutional checks and balances – other than those provided, in the period immediately following a ‘yes’ vote, by the UK Parliament and Government in the bargaining over the terms of independence. But the SNP Scottish Government plans, even in advance of the conclusion of negotiations, to assume the constitutional powers reserved to the UK Parliament by the devolution referendum of 1997.

In the event of a ‘yes’ vote the liberties of Scottish citizens may well, paradoxically, depend on the ability of the UK Government and Parliament to ensure that there is ample protection embedded in the terms of the independence agreement – because the Scottish Government has no interest in checks and balances on it power in the formative immediate post-independence years.

Note: click here to see an extended version of Norman’s contribution

Kyle Thornton, Chair of the Scottish Youth Parliament

If Scotland were to become independent, I would argue strongly we need a process which is inclusive of the whole population, especially our young people.

The guiding document of a new nation cannot be one which is Government-led. It must be from the people, for the people and approved by the people as a whole. It is an opportunity to set out our values and enshrine safeguards for our democracy and society and so we must take the time to debate and discuss what our constitution should say and crucially, that those left to draft a new constitution must be empowered to have a national conversation about what it is that a newly independent nation would want to see in its founding document

—

Note: this piece represents the views of the contributors, and not those of Democratic Audit or the LSE. Please read our comments policy before posting. The shortened URL for this post is: http://buff.ly/1i7T948

Similar Posts

- Europe is entering the ‘age of the referendum’, but there is nothing to fear for European democracy if referendums are properly regulated
- The Scottish Parliament should not have sovereign power because it serves the Scottish Government rather than holding it to account
- Debating Scotland’s transition costs: A response to Iain McLean’s critique
- What will it really cost to set up an independent Scotland? A critique of Patrick Dunleavy’s report
- Scotland’s draft interim constitution: limiting or liberating?

Posted in: Building sub-national government

Subscribe

If you enjoyed this article, subscribe to receive more just like it.

Comments are closed.

Scotland’s draft interim constitution: clear-sighted and sensible, or an SNP power-play? http://t.co/lC45eRLiV9 http://t.co/Z83GbLADJl

1. Senators home jersey
   View 4 months ago

   Senators home jersey

   Magic jerseys cheap Sizes Online

2. @democraticaudit
   View 5 months ago

   Scotland’s draft interim constitution: clear-sighted and sensible, or an SNP power-play? http://t.co/lC45eRLiV9 http://t.co/Z83GbLADJl

3. @LSEPubAffairs
   View 5 months ago

   Scotland’s draft interim constitution: Clear-sighted and sensible, or an SNP power-play? http://t.co/7LZF0a7yNt

4. @PJDunleavy
   View 5 months ago

   “Unionists as well as nationalists should welcome such a clear-headed document as this constitution”, says Ian McLean http://t.co/9sACcNEoFt

5. @democraticaudit
   View 5 months ago

   Scotland’s draft interim constitution: Clear-sighted and sensible, or an SNP power-play? http://t.co/tGBqMg4DYn

Enter Search Terms  search

DA on Social Media

Should the UK lower the voting age?

This new e-collection from Democratic Audit, edited by DA’s Sean Kippin and Richard Berry, seeks to promote the best  Read More »

The 2012 Democratic Audit

Our latest (2012) Audit of democracy in the UK has now been published and is available here Read More »

Democratic Audio podcast

The lack of gender balance in positions of power remains untackled buff.ly/1EYXYDK

Democracy is the biggest loser when parliament descends into farce

The party leaders must ensure that the next set of election debates don’t focus solely on England

The PwC report on Tower Hamlets highlights fundamental tensions in local democracy, not always thought through clearly in new mayoral systems

The only way to protect citizens from their governments is to divide sovereign authority between the national and international levels

Painting in primary colours: political populism and the muted mainstream

Book Review: The Price of Public Intellectuals by Raphael Sassower

Civic Conversations facilitated by social media can help to reshape the relationship between citizens and local government
The Scottish independence referendum need not include the rest of the UK, even though they are affected.

A response to Roger Scruton: no, democracy is not overrated.

MPs with slim majorities and frontbenchers are the most prolific parliamentary tweeters.

The Government’s proposal for an ‘English only’ stage in the House of Commons could create problems.

The Public Service Industry: A constitutional blasphemy and a democratic perversion.

Highly educated young people are less likely to vote than older people with much lower levels of attainment.

A response to Roger Scruton: no, democracy is not overrated.

The Scottish independence referendum need not include the rest of the UK, even though they are affected.

London Assembly elections show internal party cultures, not the electoral system, prevent equal opportunities for women in politics.sell Brand has a point about disillusionment with politics, but he is wrong when he says young people shouldn’t vote.

Democracy experts are divided on Lord Stevens’ proposals to reform police accountability.

Democratic Audit features a series of posts exploring the UK’s future prospects as a political union.

Democratic Audit features a series of posts exploring how the internet is transforming democracy.

Categories

- Achieving accountable government
- Book reviews
- Building sub-national government
- Crowdsourcing the Constitution
- Democratic Audit Shorts
- Euro Elections Briefings
- Extending human and civic rights
- Improving voting and elections
- Informing and engaging citizens
- Involving young people in democracy
- Modernising parliamentary democracy
- Uncategorised

Blogroll

- 10 Gower Street (Birkbeck)
- 18 Degrees
- Ballots and Bullets (Nottingham University)
- Bernard Crick Centre
- Campaign for Freedom of Information
- Citizenship Foundation
- Constitution UK: Crowdsourcing the UK’s constitution
- Dan Iellinke
- Eastminster (University of East Anglia)
- Election etc
- Ethnic Politics
- Future of the UK and Scotland
- INLOGOV (Birmingham University)
- International IDEA
- Involve
- Local Government Chronicle
- Lords of the Blog
- LSE British Politics and Policy Blog
- LSE EuropBlog
- LSE Impact of Social Sciences Blog
- LSE Review of Books
- New Political Communication Unit (Royal Holloway)
- Nick Pearce’s Blog @ IPPR
- Open Knowledge Foundation
- Our Democratic Heritage
- Our Kingdom
- Political Studies Association
- Politics in Spire
- politics upside down (Southampton University)
- PSA Women and Politics
- Public law for everyone

Scotland’s draft interim constitution: clear-sighted and sensible, or an SNP power-pla...